This is the Search Document for all the Adobe Portable Document Format (PDF) documents contained on the Event Data Recorder Technical Information web site.

To perform a search, on the drop-down menu bar across the top of this application, click Edit. The menu will drop down, and you then click Search. This will open another menu in which you will select Query.

The Adobe Acrobat Search window is now open, containing a window to type words in to search on, with the heading Find Results Containing Text. Enter the word or words you wish to search for, select the options you wish to use in searching, and click the Search button.

All of the documents on this web site have been indexed with the Adobe indexing feature. Every word contained in the documents can be searched on, and all documents containing the searched word(s) will be displayed, with an indicator of the frequency of the searched word(s) in the documents. Simply double-click on the document title and it will be opened to the location of the found word(s). You may also click the View button to open the highlighted document. Clicking the Info… button opens a window with a document properties listing for the highlighted document.

The Search window remains open while a selected document is being viewed, so further documents may be selected and viewed without performing the same search again. Searching for new words requires starting the process again, from clicking the menu bar item Edit, and continuing on from there. Multiple Search windows can be open at once. You do not have to close the last Search window in order to perform another search.

For further help in performing searches, Adobe Acrobat Help contains thorough documentation, and the web site http://www.adobe.com/support/readguide.html contains even more information about the Adobe Acrobat Reader.
